CONTENTS

🕷The Legend of Speedrunner S: The Ring of Lightning (Life, 100% Completion, English, No optional love, No ego mutiny, No tuning death deadline, DGDR, No optional allies, Permadeath)	Time Loss (Seconds)	Time (Minutes)
Extinction Event Skip	-1.200	01:13
Leaving Rhea	-3.100	02:41
Tower of God 1	-0.045	03:66
Ring of Lightning	-0.980	04:89
Mummy Amulet	-0.031	06:14
Nuke Escort	-3.200	07:34
Exiled Key	-0.981	08:57
Infinite Cash Glitch	-1.100	09:80
Enter Shy-Skyline	-3.000	11:00
Cloud Cavern	-1.210	12:23
Thermal Vent 17	-0.041	13:48
Lamptown Cellar	-0.001	14:73
Fire Flood	-2.292	15:95
Protein Ligand Complex Dissociation	-0.071	17:19
Tower of God 2	-1.183	18:42
God	+0.030	19:67
19:67.77	PB	PB
Previous Best		20:21

Final Days Radio

100% Life Speedrun

PLAYLIST

Dead Man Walking	Intro
Little Dark Age	TRACK 1
Welcome To My World	TRACK 2
I Don’t Belong	TRACK 3
The Agency Group	TRACK 4
Nuke Tech	TRACK 5
Pyramid of Bones	TRACK 6
CAN’T SAY	TRACK 7
Short Change Hero	TRACK 8
Day ‘N’ Nite (nightmare)	TRACK 9
Take Me in Your Army	TRACK 10
D>E>A>T>H>M>E>T>A>L	TRACK 11
1400 / 999 Freestyle	TRACK 12
Die Very Rough	TRACK 13
life?... lol	TRACK 14
Into The Sunset	Credits

House Rules

Life - Must conceptualize then inhabit life

100% Completion - Must determine then fulfill life mission; must pursue mandatory love

English - English language abstraction matrix

No optional love - Optional love banned

No ego mutiny - Reader identification and empathizing banned

No tuning death deadline - Prolonging inevitable death banned

DGDR - Die in game, die in real life (Braincap + voltage link pre applied)

No optional allies - Optional allies banned

Permadeath - Respawn; resurrection; revival; resuscitation; banned

Chronology

00:00 - 01:13	Park Rioteva Ngelion verifies ballistic missile threat inbound to Columbus, Ohio; weeps, recovers, then skips event with deep delusion.
01:13 - 02:41	Birth in New World to Astronomer mother, Gladiator Father. Disembarks.
02:41 - 03:66	Negotiates with God's Tower re: entry.
03:66 - 04:89	Inherits Ring of Lightning, becoming SSSS.
04:89 - 06:14	Dungeon crawl; acquires Mummy Amulet boosting Necromancy stat.
06:14 - 07:34	Delivery mission for HTO's Gov. Raises global influence.
07:34 - 08:57	Unskippable ally acquisition 1.
08:57 - 09:80	Jailbreaks economy exploit; accesses higher tier gear.
09:80 - 11:00	Communes with Rat King; blimps to Shy-Skyline.
11:00 - 12:23	Raids the Cloud Cavern; unskippable ally acquisition 2.
12:23 - 13:48	O_2 crisis peaks; finds refuge underwater with cyanobacteria.
13:48 - 14:73	Dungeon crawl 2; dire combat & mandatory love.
14:73 - 15:95	Earth enflamed. Only unbanned optional: time reset or stat omniboost.
15:95 - 17:19	Separation of skills into component parts. Max Necromancy vs. Mobility.
17:19 - 18:42	Assembly of keys. Enters Tower of God.
18:42 - 19:67	Final boss battle & sacrifice. Ohio explosion imminent.
19:67 - 28:43	Final thoughts on reversion to doomed reality. Intimate chat with reader on music, games, and pizza toppings.

Preface

If I were God I'd build a tower, put it in the middle of some forbidden ocean, then have an infinite stream of zombies rush busted-dam-like through a portal outside the tower into major cities across the globe until only the strongest and luckiest humans were left.

I've always been a big fan of zombie apocalypse. For one thing, its universe allows for those dangerous intrusive thoughts of mine to flourish, or in other words:

mass murder would not only be necessary for survival, but encouraged as part of the mission to reclaim Earth from the enemy

Lust isn't lust it's reproduction, and reproduction is doomed

Suicide as being unlawful would make more sense than ever

Purpose would saturate the air in my zombified world; genuine connection would become the fiercest reward life has to offer what with there being so few people and so little trust left.

The ballistic missile warning was in all caps. I'm confident that it's real, since it's on the news. Not sure why Ohio was targeted—not that I'm not grateful—I'm pretty certain one nuke dropping means the end of the world regardless of where it lands.

Luckily enough for me, I've been preparing my entire life to die. I've painstakingly rehearsed and memorized every train of thought necessary to live out an entire lifetime's worth of human experience (all in my head) in as little as 1200 seconds. Maybe less.

I'm recording it all here on this google doc connected to my school email, so that posterity can find it if our species manages to endure the calamity.

Fantasies feed the matters of the heart. My heart trembles at the thought of its imminent vaporization, and lashes out yearning for the possibility of second chance. It beats hard and fast for second chance at purpose, at love, at growth, at everything.

But I will receive no second chance. I can't flee; where would I go? The initial blast radius is the most comforting place to die by far. Even if I were to somehow steal air transport, or raid a bunker, the radiation or the starvation or the isolation etc. would kill me—it would only be a matter of time. A physical escape is futile.

But the rate-limiting reagent for life is action, not thought. The impetus is on me to take what I want from consciousness, if what I want is to experience something fulfilling before death.

I've linked the dead man's switch in my brain to the electrodes on the EEG cap and applied the necessary gels, so that as soon as I perish in my mind the trigger word I've trained myself to associate with death will burst across my conscience, activating the circuit so that it opens and fries me. It won't come to that, because I've practiced immaculately and can recall with precision every experience I plan on living and I can think it all with extreme speed in exact chronological order and the computer's scribe application is active and will have posted the results at the start somewhere, autosaving as soon as I'm done, so that you'll know how quickly I did it—lived, struggled, chose, and died—even though I'll never have the chance to know myself.

Dead Man Walking

(The Extinction Event Skip)

The ballistic missile warning was a false alarm. The National Enemy Incident Management System's head guy apologized then publicly resigned by blowing one in his mouth and then posting the vid on the internet. Something about a miscommunication during an emergency drill—three percent of the species was lost during the confusion—okay.

You'd have to be stupid to believe in apocalypse, so I haven't got much sympathy for those folks that panicked and subsequently suicided. There are all sorts of clips of people thinking they needed out from their caravan or skyscraper only to be confronted by a lake of unintellegent zombie nostalgic for the juicy excesses of the initial outbreak and hungry to relive its glory. I stayed put here in Rhea, Ihoi, in the hills, where my clan has stayed from the start. For those unfamiliar with North American geography, Ihoi is an anti-cloudsync-based nation-state sandwiched between The Western Gigantamax California and The Eastern Conglomerate of Floridian Godlands. It is composed of former US Kentucky, Tennessee, Indiana, and of course Ohio, having been formed after NA ex-superhoarder I'm stronger than all of them forced the borders of his tripartite American vision, having been born in Florida, schooled in California, and retired in Ohio, favoring those states in particular, then turning them and surrounding territory into amalgamated, interdependent sovereignties.

My name is Park Rioteva Ngelion. I was named partly after the iconic anime Neon Genesis Evangelion, where giant human-piloted robots fight aliens called 'angels' only for none of it to matter and the world to end. My first name comes from Peter Parker, the superhero Spiderman's secret identity. My genome was designed by The Riot Company, an adjunct of The Agency Group.

I am short, constantly hungry, my hair is neon and straight and shaped like the crescent moon, my skin a mix of green and orange, I am covered entirely in tiny black dots, I have no special powers or abilities, I have killed less than ten million unintelligent zombie with conventional firearms and melee weapons, less than ten special zombie with the same, zero humans.

I'm not qualified enough to be a hoarder.

My mother was a hoarder. Her hoarder title was Black Hole. She was extremely short and black—was neither attractive nor friendly. She would juke large crowds of zombies, running in increasingly large infinity-shaped circles only barely dodging to maintain the enemy appetite just up until the crowd was optimally large and the danger on the brink of overwhelming her. Miles worth of bodies would eventually fall into perfectly black, circular gorges in the ground of unknown depth, traps set then lit by her on chemical fire with mysterious reagents barfed out or shat; she'd use the great bursts of unordinary light and sound that the pits emitted as inspiration for her metal songs and death poems about space.

She was a smalltown girl but a big fish in the Ihoian hoarder scene, peaking top 3000 on the global leaderboard and even having been featured on Authority's celebrity hoarder gasnet for her name's ironic significance.

My dad was unlike her in that he was legitimately famous. He peaked in the plus200s and was considered pseudo-legendary Gladiator class, this being the result of his incredibly unusual base stat spread; an abnormal combination of high strength and high speed, the physics of which boggled HTO agent spectators when for instance he'd wield swords and clubs or hammers or maces twice or even three times his bodyweight and many times his length and width (average height and build) before dashing around casually outspeeding lower-intensity vehicles and clearing out hoards that could touch a mountain's ankles, in terms of volume, during his peak. His title was known even internationally; he was Apex Shmoe, or the King of the Joe Shmoes, because of the exceptional power he claimed within such an unexceptional body and appearance. He was 5'9, blank-faced, smelled always like clay, smoked cigarettes with no tobacco in them, wore T-shirts and jeans and black sneakers even when hoarding, looked decent for his age in terms of arms and legs and gut, had some hair—stabby thin and brown—barely any eyebrows, he looked like a nobody, which had become rare in this world of high-contrast individualism.

He met my mother at the beach. At the time, the zombie pandemic had finally stabilized, what with the creation of the first breakthrough vaccine which granted immunity to airborne infection.

There were two problems that accompanied the creation of the vaccine. One was that the NA source portal in the pacific had diverged, sacrificing some of its size so as to create a second front on the east coast in the Atlantic, but no one knew it was happening; portal physics were still googogaga sci-fi at the time. Second was that many refused vaccination out of a variety of fears, some well-founded, some completely arbitrary, some pathetically silly.

Cities still occupied the surface, and strong sea-level, state-sized fortresses like Old Beldum, on the eastern coast in what was once called New Jersey, stubbornly clung to pre-pandemic social practice hosting beach parties and sports tournaments and other densely concentrated activities. My father was one of those who refused to be vaccinated, so was ducking state monitoring of vaccine status under a pier, away from all the bodies, which worried him.

My mother, one of the city's agents, was responsible for tracking him down. The city was aware of a higher caliber hoarder presence, but it didn't appear malicious to its sensory types, so the matter was left alone up until a vaccine requirement was ratified into law.

Though comparatively unpowerful, mother's abilities were strange and poorly documented; according to my father she always had a weird way of being exactly where she needed to be doing the exact right things to make a moment feel important, and upon waking up from a short nap on the sand, found her straddling him, a machine pistol jostling against his temple, her head turned away towards the sounds of crashing, foamy waves.

- How was I supposed to know? (Dad)
- Supposed to know what? (Mom)
- How was I supposed to know this was serious?
- What are you talking about?
- There is no logical way for you not to know what it is that I'm talking about.
- I don't. Also it doesn't matter, I need you to come with me.
- OK—I'm not vaccinated. I'm bigoted, I don't believe in science, I'll leave the city right away I promise.
- I need you to be serious with me for a moment, because I'm trying to engage with you and have a serious conversation.
- I'm willing to have a serious conversation.
- OK then.
- Yes.
- You're strong. What are you doing here in Beldum? Hoarders like you are needed on the front-lines. Isn't the west on fire right now, and in 'desperate need of strength,' or something like that. I requested a transfer, but apparently I'm 'too crafty. Not actually strong.'

- Do you think all those people having fun up there on the boardwalk, having fun crossing bridges and living in treehouses or even cheering cheering loudly in stadiums eating cooked foods and playing or spectating spectator sports are ready to die, or just in denial of the fact that it's going to happen. Inevitably.
- Not to be boring, but you're ignoring my question. Also no one is dying, the city's tracked hoarder movement rolls and have definitively concluded that Jersey's out of tsunami-type range today tomorrow and for weeks to come, which is why all the festivities. Even if something like a small herd comes through, we have plenty of people more than capable enough to handle it.
- Wow. It's—it's simply incredible to me how little you care.
- Huh?
- To me it's just wild.
- What is it that I don't care about?
- All those humans back there, partying. Party as a verb. Party as a noun. Party as both gamer jargon and coolkid vocab classic.
- You're a fucking cringer, huh? You're human too you elitist hoarder dick. You elitist hoarder dickhead. Maybe I should just pull the trigger, yeah? Nuke tech set me up with this… gun, so that I know the bullets are thick… Mmm, I like that reaction. Mhmm, keep smiling, you think can you take it, and want to start warning me to back off before I make a mistake, right? The ones who bluff are the most satisfying to kill, wouldn't you agree?
- No…No—first of all, it should never be fun to—forget it. No, I can't take that many bullets to the head. No—I'm not lying. See? It's soft all around. Now, I think the first thing we need to do before you start shooting that is strip this conversation of its pretenses, and that means you too. No more lies. I want you to stop pretending like you haven't done what you've done, and in exchange I'll stop pretending like I'm not absolutely pissed off.

- What did I do? And you're pissed off? What do you get to be pissed off about? You're the one in denial of science and evidence and you're just another ignorant God-believer like the rest of those rogue homeless vagrant dickhead hoarders, I'm sure, you're pissed off humanity will survive, you're pissed off people are doing what they like and are enjoying their lives, you're pissed off you have a responsibility to them, you're pissed off if you're—if you're pissed off it's for the wrong reasons.You know if you weren't so cute I would've already unloaded the whole clip into the side of your head, and what a shame, you smell like a quality man. I'm not good with guns, so trust me this is going to be messy.
- Pretend with me. Pretend that we're in love. Pretend that we aren't just messing with each other—that what we're doing is discovering the beauty inherent to life and to the…the beauty at the center of human relationships. Now imagine that this is something that we have. Are you imagining it?
- I'm not following.
- The reason you're not following is because it doesn't make a lick of sense, okay? Love isn't intuitive to people anymore because it's B.S. Bachelor of science. Science took love and cannabilized her—for power. This guy—this guy right here's—this guy's a humanities guy. A humanity guy. All those folks making noise and spreading cells and chasing vanity together don't know what's going on at all, I don't think, and this humanitarian this guy right here wants to help them and let them know, so that the survivors among them are prepared. If there is even one true survivor among one hundred thousand that is saved, then it will all have been worth it. You seem like you have a competent head on your shoulders. Why don't you tell them to stop? To get some help? Life shouldn't exist in that way anymore—it creates false hope. They don't do the news out here, right? Not even propaganda? Not even lies?

- No.
- You're supposed to tell me yes or make no comment. What kind of agent are you?
- Why don't you want to get vaccinated? You really disagree with the science? It's essentially irrefutable, the amount of evidence, the results, the studies, whatever, I haven't read it all, or I mean at all, but no one really but the really serious sciencey types have even read anything about how it works, I think really that they're the only ones that need to, but anyway I have faith that it does, that it works, because I haven't gotten sick or died, and neither have 99.something % of the populace up there who've taken it, the 'humans' up there, and look aren't people like you and me the most susceptible so the most dangerous?, but look it's not about you or me, ultimately. It's about everyone else. Think about everyone else. Imagine if you became a zombie and started running around chasing bodies. How many hoarders are there active in the US? Something only like 300, because of I'm stronger's jingoist dogma? How many of that 300 is stronger than you? 20? 30 maybe? How many people—what percentage of humanity would drop before you were stopped?
- Forget the reason. My reason is irrelevant, my choice is what matters. I chose to refuse, because I know that I won't die anytime soon, and when that time eventually comes, I'll be at the bottom of the sea in some dark, lonely place, just the way that I like it, and I'll be drinking my underwater drinks, playing my underwater games, I'll be chained to some seabed unable to escape, it'll be incredible. Sure, I'm a dead man walking, but remember when that was everyone? You're old enough, you remember when death was its own expectation. I want to be like how everyone was back then: unsure of when but certain they'd die. The vaccine means no becoming a zombie while you're alive, sure, but it also means no guarantee of a permanent corpse-like state, either, once you're dead. I know you haven't read for shit but I did, and that's essentially the open secret behind the shot. Nothing matters to me more than being able to rest in oblivion when I'm done living, and anyways pay attention, because see it's here, our resolution teases at us having arrived early and unexpected, having arrived swiftly—in this very moment—hiding in between the lines between sunset and ocean, breaching the horizon, hungry and desperate for attention, none of us having been ready to receive it.

- It's pathetic, the way high elo hoarders like you monologuize like…What? What is that…rumbling sou—oh no. No no no. No no no no no no not today. Direct underground access is limited today because of the state-wide festival. They don't want anyone vandalizing under—only certain military officials—some high-profile civilians have air transport. It's—no, it's pointless.
- Look at the way that it almost makes like a background is being drawn up in real time against the sun. It's almost pretty.
- The entire state is going to die before someone capable enough shows up. That's at least point four percent—gone. How did no one know about this. We can't stand by—I'll admit that we may need to collaborate. Join our power.
- Lol. Our. How many do you reckon it is?

- Uuuuhhhh, a little over a hundred mill—
- What's your solo hoard record?
- Not even fifteen million. Barely fourteen. It's—but maybe—wait but you're here. You can do 100—I know you can, you're top 500 aren't you? Isn't that nothing?
- Look at me, darling. I'm basically naked.
- You didn't bring anything with you?
- Nothing but me, sadly. I was in the area, I thought I smelled something nasty, I took a nap on the sand in preparation, because like you said a 'small herd' might have gotten through, but look at that—it's visible now, you can smell the iron in the water when the waves hit. That's no herd, it's basically an ocean.
- You can't do it then? Not even if I help?
- I can't even do 100000 without my gear.
- …
- I talked with a little girl on the way over here. She was playing on the beach alone, building castles.
- …
- It's been a long time since I encountered a child.
- You can't do anything?
- Nope. Nothing. This isn't what I expected—certainly isn't what I wanted. I'm sorry, honestly. Are you from around here? You come here often?
- I'm from a couple exits away.
- Hmm? What does that mean?
- Sorry. Uh—I'm from maybe 40 minutes outside the walls.

- You aren’t going to die here are you? Doesn’t HTO give y’all that uh—what’s it called—hearthstone or safety stone or something like that.
- Lamp Stone
- It’ll signal some sort of plane to scoop you up quick, won’t it?
- mmm.
- You don’t mind taking me with you, do you? There room?
- Yeah.
- Hey, don’t cry now. What’d I say? Didn’t I call it? Wasn’t I just saying that—ouch. Bullet right in the eye, huh? Ha.
- Shut up. Why don’t you don’t have one of these?
- They offered me one. I took it but I’m pretty sure I sold it.
- You sold it? How much was it worth?
- Lol. Not much, eight gold maybe.
- Eight gold.
- You know if they let civilians ride those things?
- Why, you wanna look for that girl? There’s basically no time left, I can feel the steam on my skin.
- Even if I knew where she was, wasn’t like I was going to swap places with her or anything. I’m just wondering if I still had my lamp stone, too, if I could’ve given it to her and the agency would still pick her up, even though she’s just a regular person.
- It’s a drone or something, I don’t think it can discriminate like that.
- I wouldn’t put it past the group.
- You would have let her join you? You would’ve taken care of that child?

- I can’t promise that I would’ve been a good father figure, but I would’ve kept it alive longer than it would’ve lived otherwise, probably.
- But that’s never going to happen because you wanted the eight gold.
- Mhmm.
- What’d you end up buying with it?
- Nothing. I went to a carnival, gambled it hoping for a full restore on my vitality and focus, since I’ve been harboring a frail-curse for a couple of years now, but I ended up losing everything, all my stuff, the gear and the armor and the weapons and all my nonobligatory thoughts. I’m on nothing but mandatory equipment now, mentally speaking. Just the basics like my core-values and my muscle memory.
- Wait—so—nevermind. Ha, you’re so full of shit, but I like you, I guess. Sorry you had to see me tear up. Do you want me to name you before I beam us out?
- Sure. What sounds good this time of year. I’d prefer something masculine. Short, and easy to remember, but still unique.
- Unique?, huh? I’ve got the perfect name in mind.
- Really? Already? That’s exciting. What is it?
- You’re Joe, from now on. Also—you’re my new boyfriend. In exchange for passage back to HTO headquarters in Ihoi I’ll take your DNA, then mix it with mine, so that we can design the perfect hoarder baby. Sound like a deal, asshole?

Joe was supposed to have nodded.

I’m not sure why I bothered telling the story of how they met; I didn’t like my parents at all when they were still around, though I’m still unsure of why.

I received food, water, shelter, education, encouragement, affection, discipline

Why—why is it then, that my head won't stop ringing?

(Go fuck yourself, Dad)

(Go fuck yourself, Mom)

I don't think I hated either one of you. In fact, y'all are more likely to have hated me than for me to have truly hated you, which makes sense. I was closed-off—secretive. I was gay, which I know neither one of you liked, being gay yourselves. I was smart and made logical arguments, which made you people feel small, having come from a long line of emotional, religious folk.

But here's the real deal about me, your son Park, that you both hated, that you both felt was hopeless.

Secret one: I wasn't gay; I just wanted to be resented early.

It's funny, because I'm basically genderless now, what with my not having genitals, but gender is still an evolving concept so maybe the genitals have nothing to do with it, so that sure call me male.

Here's another secret: I smoked pot regularly, and was in love with heroine but only up until I realized she couldn't kill me. Afterwards it was just like the bud. So it's true that it was me. I stole all your shit. The car, the fishtanks, Rygo, all of it.

Another: Dad—I know you cheated. When I was ten I saw you rubbing yourself while on the phone in the middle of the kitchen in the middle of the day right in front of me, and I never came to fully trust you again, having known that Mom was too poor to have owned one.

Again: Mom—I know you did it too. You're a terrible actress. What kind of Dominican woman cries when cheated on?

Last one (for the reader): I lied about not being a qualified hoarder. I'll tell you how it is that I inherited The Ring of Lightning, becoming the Speedrunner Superhoarder Slavemaster Spidergod, but not right now, since I still haven't really welcomed you to my world yet. Mom and Dad both wanted me to become a hoarder—instead I began my career as a physician innovating the definition of life by recruiting healthy, intelligent zombies as military pawns to hunt those governments and those mountain hoards with the power to defy America (specifically Ihoi). Though, once organized infrastructure was completely collapsed, once cheeks were made of nothing but children and radiation, once that video was viralized of the astronauts building a bong in the space station causing The First Colony and Final Hope to violently explode, my companions and I agreed on hunting bigger. Government was—still is—frail human prey. Its low-hanging branches bare few bitter-sweet fruits. Bad zombie-ocean & mountain hunting is still fulfilling, sure, but as we hone our craft and power, it becomes easier and easier and requires less and less strategy (so is boring) and there will always be more of it.

I've always been repulsed by the thought of my human weakness, so for a time I figured why not exterminate myself. Become my own speciation event horizon. It was lofty and sad, that ideology of finishing off the species after the third wave of the zombie pandemic had initially stabilized, when I was still brimming with that self-hatred—that sort of idea eventually became stale (blowing up a hidden classroom, blowing up a bunkered airplane, blowing up an underground city, blowing up an underwater continent), especially what with their finally being only something like 80000 or something normal humans left, scattered across the globe as rare and endangered as the biodiverse, the lusciously green, the ecosystem, the baby blue textures of centuries past, all swallowed like roaches drowned in the sink—but it was purpose, and it was enough for my thirties.

For people like me, for the ones who inherited the planet, those with the power to dominate as creator or destroyer…what it ultimately comes down to is hunting a good death clearing out the largest body of flesh and blood, the source of the zombies, in God's Tower. We would pour all our efforts into cleansing those doomed slow-brainless, and them alone, which was progressive unlike anything hoarder history had seen before, which for the longest time hunted zombies indiscriminately.

Stance on life is finally secondary to its inverse's obliteration, now that the source portal has begun metastasizing to every ocean, meaning we can't play the waiting game anymore, we have to go on the offensive.

Plus it's too much fun and too much sense of purpose terraforming the planet with bad zombie biology, with the excuse that you're—what—I guess sowing the seeds for Earth's next iteration, or something like that, by attempting to rid it of the zombie-respawn scourge.

I hope she puts that bullet between your eyes, Dad, just like she promised, or at least that she still thinks about it and that you can tell.

Yes and I hope he sledgehams your breasts off in your sleep, Mom, and feeds them to you by sneaking into the hospital and—having made the stuff into jam or goo of some sort—mixes it into your hospital food like he swore he would as soon as I'd become a man.

I'm a man now.

Why did I bother looking for you people among the first raid's rubble?

I don't think it was to kill you myself

Good luck with things if you're still alive

–Fragment